Who gets to change activation?

Growth wants to exclude employees. Finance still uses the all-account series. Bring the definition you approved on Saturday. Decide which report can switch and how Finance can reproduce last quarter.

Ask These Before You Ask for a Tool

Governance

Who owns the definition? Who arbitrates conflict?

Incentive

If speed gets rewarded and reuse does not, useful work vanishes.

Accountability

A trusted answer needs a name attached.

Norms

Corrections flow back when people can report them without blame.

Ask what leadership counts and whether its scoreboard rewards useful work that compounds across teams.

Source: Paras Doshi, Assess Your AI Data and Analytics Capabilities, slide 10

Read the change in ordinary language.

The current definition includes every eligible account. The proposed definition includes eligible external accounts.

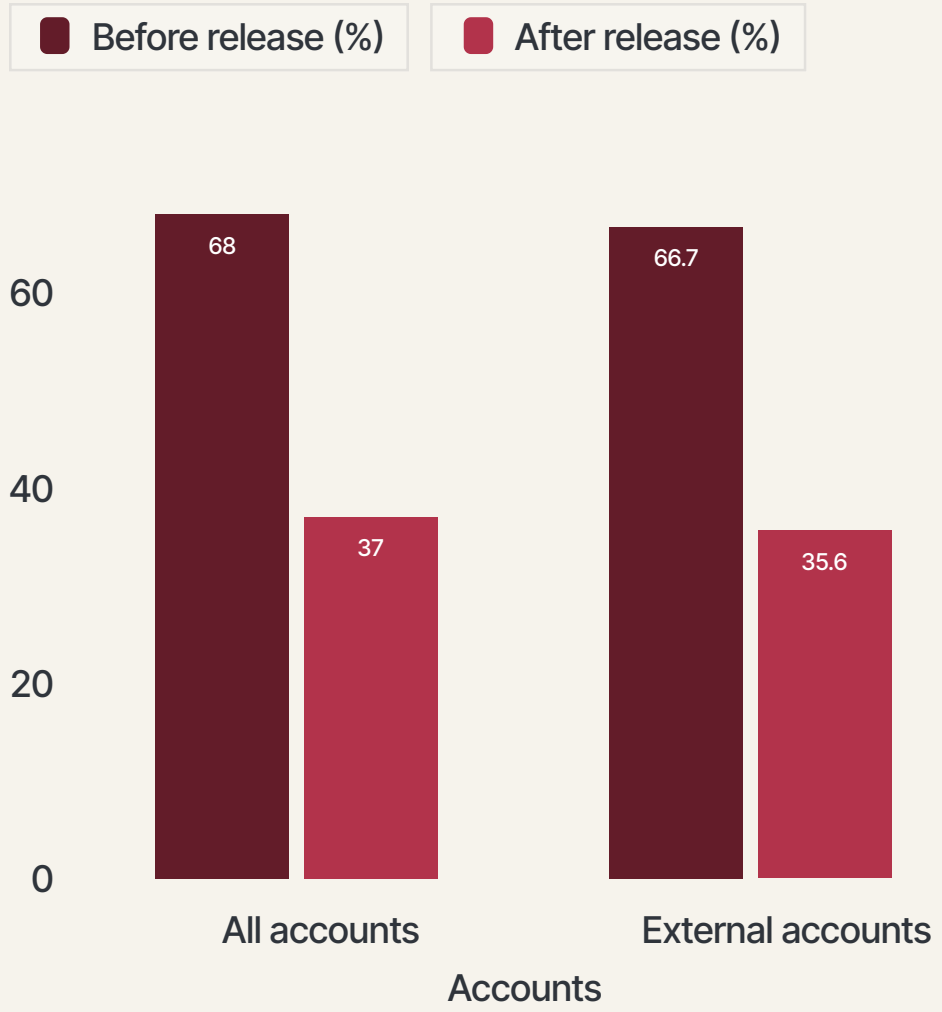

Name it activation_external_7d so someone reading an old report can still tell what it measured.

Run both definitions on the same periods.

Before the release, all accounts gave 680/1,000. External accounts gave 600/900.

After the release the counts are 370/1,000 and 320/900.

Show both lines to the people who depend on them.

Now 100 accounts have no audience label.

Growth wants to publish the external-account rate, but 100 accounts have no audience label. Hold the change. Ask Identity Engineering to classify them and issue a current receipt. Then rerun both definitions before Growth changes its headline.

Check that your source is still current.

Compare the extract’s fingerprint with the steward’s receipt in org/snapshots.csv.

Was the source less than one day old when the decision was made?

Try the check after changing one count.

Which report switches first?

Give Growth an effective date and a metric owner. Then ask Finance to recover its old number. Record what each team can do in work/model-release.md.

Would Finance sign the same number?

Growth has Finance's signed control total. Compare it with the model's count. If they differ, ask who will reconcile distinct eligible and activated accounts. Tell Growth which report it can use while that work is open.